What is the Pact for the Future?

In his recent video, Nelson Walters exposes “The Pact for the Future,” a document that he suggests may align with biblical prophecies, including the prophecy of the Covenant in Daniel 9:27, which he believes could mark the beginning of the tribulation period, or the final seven years of human rule. Walters connects recent global developments with these prophecies, expressing concern about the potential shift in global governance and its implications for national sovereignty, particularly for Israel and the United States. The video serves as a warning and calls viewers to prepare for what he sees as the impending tribulation.

A Fulfillment of Biblical Prophecy?

Walters begins by making a bold claim that a significant prophecy, possibly the most important since the formation of Israel in 1948, was fulfilled recently with the approval of the “Pact for the Future.” He argues that this document aligns with the “Covenant with the Many”

mentioned in Daniel 9:27, which he believes triggers the beginning of the tribulation and the final seven years of human rule on Earth. Walters acknowledges that this event has received little attention in mainstream media but insists that it marks a pivotal moment in world history.

The Pact for the Future and Global Governance

The Pact, which was adopted during a UN Summit for the Future, is described by Walters as a significant step towards transforming the United Nations from a cooperative international body into a global governing authority. He explains that this transformation would allow the UN to exert control over nations during various “global emergencies,” ranging from climate change to health crises. Walters expresses concern that the United States, along with other nations, is relinquishing its sovereignty to this emerging global government, which he believes is aligned with international “globalists” who oppose traditional Judeo-Christian values and the U.S. Constitution.

Lack of Resistance from Political Leaders

A major point of concern for Walters is the lack of attention and resistance from political leaders, particularly those in the U.S. Congress. He notes that while some lawmakers have acknowledged the importance of the Pact, there has been little substantial opposition from key political figures. Walters criticizes the timing of the Pact’s approval, which he suggests was strategically chosen to coincide with distractions such as football games and other entertainment, making it easier for globalists to pass significant legislation unnoticed.

Symbolism of the White Horseman and the Peace Covenant

Walters links the Pact directly to the first seal of the Book of Revelation, which speaks of the arrival of the white horseman. He draws symbolic parallels between the white horseman, who carries a bow without arrows, and the UN’s peaceful yet powerful approach to global governance. Walters further connects this symbolism to the peace covenant that will eventually force Israel to divide its land, aligning this event with biblical prophecies of a false peace and the eventual destruction that follows.

Voting Patterns and Globalist Resistance

As evidence of this global shift, Walters points to the voting results on the Pact for the Future, noting that Russia, Iran, Syria, and other nations typically viewed as adversaries of the West opposed it. He suggests that these nations may be resisting globalist influence, while the so-called “good” nations are succumbing to it. Walters sees this as further proof that the world is moving towards the fulfillment of biblical prophecy.

Key Provisions of the Pact

In the latter part of the video, Walters delves into the specifics of the Pact, which he says contains numerous “woke” agendas, including digital economy initiatives, reproductive rights, and climate change policies. However, he emphasizes that the most concerning sections deal with peace and security, particularly provisions that could force Israel to accept a two-state solution. Walters warns that this could have dire consequences for Israel and signals the beginning of the end times.

Call to Prepare for the Tribulation

Walters concludes by urging viewers to prepare for the tribulation, suggesting that the signs of its arrival are evident. He encourages spiritual readiness, offering resources such as his book, “How to Prepare for the Last Days,” and emphasizes the importance of staying vigilant as global events unfold.

The video ends with a prayer, reaffirming the belief that despite the challenges ahead, God remains in control. Walters urges his audience to remain faithful and aware of the unfolding biblical events, while also preparing for the next stage of the tribulation, symbolized by the arrival of the red horseman of war.
